IN A POISON FACTORY.

The Deadly Drugs Have a Fascinating
Drama For the Workmen.

"Slip on this glass mask," said the foreman. "You will need it."

The visitor donned the uncanny mask of glass, and the foreman led the way to the cyanide of potassium department.

"We make 1,000 tons of cyanide a year," he said. "A dose of five grains is a fatal one. Thus our annual product is enough to kill 2,500,000 people."

He opened a door, and a room filled with writhing flames, dense shadows, sparks, smoke and weird figures in glass masks was revealed. In the center of the room, in a great cauldron, 100 pounds of molten cyanide of potassium bubbled and seethed. The flames glinted strangely on the glass masks.

The foreman coughed.

"These fumes," he said, "are whole some. The men, you see, are all robust. I have known weakly chaps, working here among these strange fumes, to pick up health and strength."

In another clean, cool room the finished cyanide was stored. It looked like crystallized white sugar, good enough to eat.

"Good enough to eat," said the foreman gravely. "Well, we have had men eat it. Four men committed suicide in that way."

"The fumes seem to create in our men a desire to taste the drug. They fight this desire, most of them, successfully, but they all feel it, the same as workers in coffee plants want to chew the coffee beans, and some feel it so strongly as to succumb." Cincinnati Enquirer.

VIRGINS' GARLANDS.

Memorials in an English Church to Girls True to First Love.

There are seven "virgin's garlands" still in existence in Minsterley church, Salop, the first of them bearing the date 1554 and the last 1751.

They consist of silk ribbons and paper, ball shaped, and are covered with rosettes, the inside center of the case, a straw frame supporting a pair of paper gloves. They represent a romantic custom of very ancient origin and are sacred to the memory of girls who while betrothed in their youth lost their intended husbands by death, yet remained true to their first loves.

Each maiden designed her own garland, and at her death this simple emblem was borne before her by the village lassies, the white gloves being afterward added. After the obsequies these garlands were suspended in the village church on a rod bearing at its extremity a heart in the shape of an escutcheon, upon which the initials and date were inscribed. These were originally fixed above the maiden's pew.

Some of the earliest and forgotten garlands were composed of real flowers, but later the colored hoops described were substituted.

There is a passing allusion to this "simple memorial of the early dead" in "Hamlet": "Yet here she is allowed her virgin crants," "crants" signifying garlands.—London Graphic.

Hunting Birds With Greyhounds.

The great bustard is the rarest bird that comes under the category of "game." This bird formerly haunted all the level countries of England and was particularly common on Salisbury Plain. From the reign of Henry VIII, repeated measures were passed in order to protect it; and it is expressly included under the head of game in the statute of the first year of the reign of William IV., which codified and reformed the laws relating to game.

The close season for bustard shooting was, and is, from the 1st of March to the 1st of September.

But the native bustard is now extinct in England. The last was killed at Swartham, in Norfolk, in 1858. Any that have been shot since have been merely casual visitors, probably coming from the plains of Saxony. The causes of the disappearance of the bustard are, firstly, the sport they afforded, for they were hunted with greyhounds as well as shot; secondly, the increase in the amount of cultivated land.

This largest of European birds, weighing as much as thirty pounds, could no longer find any sufficient support on the closely cropped plains of England.—London Quaker.
